

Portland Pack Chronicles: Book Two In the four months since hedgehog shifter Avery Babineaux started investigating the disappearance of a young female werewolf from the Portland Pack, heâ€™s discovered his lifeâ€™s passion. Now heâ€™s apprenticing under established PI Corbin Reid. Avery hopes his training with Reid will help him finally bring Lacey home, but detective work isnâ€™t without its perils, and the potential dangers strain his relationship with his new mate, Dylan. Dylan Green would be perfectly content with his mating and his motorcycle shop if it wasnâ€™t for his constant worry about Averyâ€™s safety and the fact that Averyâ€™s never home. Proud as he might be of Averyâ€™s determination to prove his worth and fulfill his promise to Laceyâ€™s father, Dylan canâ€™t stand the thought of Avery being hurt. Yet what right does he have to demand Avery give up his job when itâ€™s clear Averyâ€™s found his true purpose? Still, Dylan wishes he could, and the appearance of a new police detective who sets his sights on Avery only adds to the tension. Something has to give, but stubbornness runs in both their veins, and it might take a catastrophe for them to find a compromise they can live with.
